Delvin Johnson, historic preservation officer for the Alabama-Coushatta Tribe of Texas, helped out at the Sam Houston Center's America250 celebration June 27. In an effort to keep tribal languages alive, Delvin has arranged summer schooling for young folks in in both Alabama and Coushatta. He himself is fluent on both languages. To stay current with today's new terms (such as computer, AI, etc.) the tribes are working on the creation of new words to accommodate these additions.

Tribal members in attendance at the America250 celebration all seemed to have Anglo last names. They noted that tribal members originally only had the one name which they used as their first name, but as time passed, for identification reasons, they had to add on a last name. Many ended up using their employer's last name, hence the Anglo last names for many tribe members.

Shyler Thompson of the Alabama-Coushatta Tribe of Texas, taught herself to make these beautiful beaded pieces.

Coach Mike Baird, well-known coach in Hull-Daisetta a few years ago, joined many others at the America250 celebration at the Sam Houston Regional Library June 27.
